Cover:

Hovering in submarine gloom on the floor of Florida's North Biscayne Bay, Seagrass Restorationist Anitra Thorhaug works at the painstaking task of installing seagrass plants on bare sand. Undersea "prairies" dominated by various species of grasses are highly productive plant communities, and play an important role in nearshore ecosystems in many parts of the world, but have suffered extensive damage in the past as a result of disturbances such as dredging, pollution and disease. Thorhaug is one of a small cadre of restorationists who have begun to take on the exacting, exhausting, and sometimes dangerous work of restoring seagrass beds. The bracelet on Thorhaug's left arm holds metal pins used to hold plants in place while they become established. A story describing the exploits of the seagrass restorationists begins on page 5.
